The Center for the Study of Gender and Sexuality (CSGS) is pleased to announce the dissertation fellowship competition for the academic year 2017-18. There will be two fellowships awarded.

Eligibility: University of Chicago PhD candidates from all disciplines who are working in the areas of gender and or sexuality studies are encouraged to apply. Applicants must have been admitted to candidacy by April 3, 2017, and should be at an advanced stage of writing the dissertation. Residency at CSGS during the main three academic quarters is essential. Some travel for research for brief periods is allowed, but this must be discussed with the CSGS Faculty Director in advance.

Please note: Other University of Chicago funding may restrict eligibility. Because the intent behind this fellowship is to allow the awardee to devote her/his full attention and effort to the dissertation, the terms of this award do not allow one to engage in any remunerative activity or to hold any other award during the period. Under some circumstances, an exception may be made for teaching one course, but this will be subject to some restrictions.

Award: The successful candidates will receive a stipend of $23,000 for the academic year 2017-18. Tuition, student fees, and health insurance will be covered by the award. The recipients of this fellowship will also be given a shared office at the Center for the Study of Gender and Sexuality from September 4, 2017, through August 24, 2018. The recipients of the fellowship are expected to participate in and present at the Gender and Sexuality Studies Workshop and generally to participate in the intellectual life of the center as a whole.
